

New Pay Transparency Laws in BC Will Affect Legal Marketing

PRESTON PARSONS, Partner, Overholt Law LLP

The new Pay Transparency Act received Royal Assent on May 11, 2023 and introduces new requirements on employers to increase pay transparency (the “Act”). With the passage of this Act, BC joins federally regulated private employers in Canada, as well as other Canadian provinces in implementing pay transparency laws including Manitoba, Quebec, New Brunswick, Ontario, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia.

The Act is intended to address systemic discrimination in the workplace. Statistics Canada identified that BC has one of the highest gender pay gaps in Canada. On average, women in BC earned 16.7% less than men in 2021, whereas the national median lies at 12.9%. The full discussion paper can be viewed online¹, but these statistics indicate that there are still barriers to gender equality that remain unaddressed. This is not a Canadian phenomenon: parts of the United States including California and New York, as well as the United Kingdom, Australia, France, Norway, and Denmark have also implemented pay transparency laws.

EFFECTIVE IMMEDIATELY

Since May 11, 2023, all BC employers are prohibited from asking job applicants about their pay history, unless this information is publicly accessible.

Employers are also prohibited from dismissing, suspending, demoting, disciplining, harassing, or disadvantaging (or threatening to take these actions against) an employee for:

- » inquiring about their pay to the employer;
- » disclosing their own pay information to another employee of the employer, or to another individual who has applied for employment with that employer;
- » inquiring with the employer about a pay transparency report or information contained in these reports;
- » asking the employer to comply with their obligations under the Act; or
- » reporting to the director in relation to the employer's compliance with its obligations under the Act.

COMING SOON

As of November 1, 2023, all BC employers are required to include the expected pay or expected pay range on a publicly advertised job posting. Notably, the job poster does not need to disclose pay information if it is not posted publicly.

Another requirement also takes effect on November 1, 2023: publicly posting annual pay transparency reports. Unlike the prior obligations outlined earlier in this article, the annual reporting requirement pertains only to a “reporting employer” as defined in the Act, rather than to employers in general. The definition of “reporting employer” expands over time though, slowly capturing a broader range of BC employers as follows:

- » By November 1, 2023: the BC government and the six largest Crown corporations, which are BC Hydro, BC Housing, BC Lottery Corporation, BC Transit, ICBC, and WorkSafeBC will be required to post annual pay transparency reports.
- » Thereafter, the requirement to post annual pay transparency reports applies as follows:

Staffing Issue?

R•JOHNSON www.RJOHNSONCORP.com

- By November 1, 2024: all BC employers with 1,000 employees or more;
- By November 1, 2025: all employers with 300 employees or more; and
- By November 1, 2026: all employers with 50 employees or more.

While BC employers with less than 50 employees may be tempted to breathe a sigh of relief, the Act provides for the possibility that this reporting requirement will apply in a year after 2026. In other words, stay tuned.

The specific requirements for the annual pay transparency reports will not be available until later in 2023. Those requirements are currently being developed in collaboration with the BC Public Service Agency, and the first tranche of reporting employers with reports due November 1, 2023. In the interim, what we know is:

- » the pay transparency report will apply to all employees of an organization in BC;
- » gender information may be collected by an employer following the Gender and Sex Data Standard, but employees may decline to provide their gender to their employer for the purpose of this report;
- » employees can voluntarily update their gender information annually (in fact, employers are required to make this option available);
- » the report:
 - will include information on the pay gap differences between hourly wages, overtime, and bonuses received by men, women, and non-binary people; and
 - the pay gap results will not be reported as “real wage data”; and
- » employers will submit the report using a specific reporting tool, to be developed by the BC government in the near future.

The consequences for an employer’s non-compliance are not entirely known at present; however, the Minister of Finance will publish an annual report starting June 1, 2024 indicating the number of reports of non-compliance reported to the director, as well as a description of the nature of those reports.

CONCLUSION

It will be interesting to see in the coming years whether the Act’s laudable goals will be achieved. For now, BCLMA members need to be mindful of these requirements already in effect and coming soon. The good news is that the vast majority of law firms in BC have years before the annual reporting requirements will affect them – if in fact they ever do. The bad news is that, in combination with the June 2023 Competition Act amendments prohibiting wage fixing and no-poach agreements, BC firms have a lot more regulation to keep in mind when hiring now and into the future.

Artificial Intelligence in the Legal Profession

JASON FAKIDIS, CEO, Deep Insight Analytics Inc.

The emergence and wide scale dissemination of modern Artificial Intelligence (AI) technology has captured the imagination of the public and has left humanity with a sense of both excitement and anxiety regarding the broader implications of AI in society.

WHAT IS ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE?

Artificial intelligence as a formal academic discipline surfaced in the mid 1950's. The field experienced varied levels of public confidence up until the early 1990's when machine learning techniques based on probabilistic reasoning matured. Today, the convergence of vast amounts of publicly available data, specialized computer hardware and algorithmic innovation has secured deep learning (a machine learning paradigm which employs statistical models influenced by biological neurons) as the de-facto approach to engineering intelligent systems. Specifically, foundation models (such as the ChatGPT large language model) have experienced exceptional success and have accelerated the commercialization of artificial intelligence.

LEARNING MACHINES

Modern artificial intelligence algorithms are based on statistical models which use training data to make predictions or decisions without the need for explicit programming or direct human intervention. Deep learning models, called artificial neural networks, function in a way that is loosely analogous to a human brain. To elucidate the learning process let's imagine that we would like to train a neural network to determine whether a given piece of text (such as a document containing a review of a product) has a positive or negative sentiment (or affective value). First, we would collect a large dataset of product reviews which we would label appropriately. Next, we would input each of these documents into the neural network one at a time. The network will make a prediction as to whether the image is in favour of or against a product. It will then use the label we provided to calculate a score or error which quantifies the accuracy of its prediction. The network will then use this error to update its internal state such that the predictive error of the model decreases as new examples are seen. In this way, the neural network improves its accuracy on this task as it is exposed to more and more examples.

LANGUAGE AND THE LAW

Legal professionals rely heavily on the use of language. Large volumes of text are produced and stored digitally in documents such as legal briefs, contracts, patents and judicial decisions. Language employed by judges, lawyers and regulators is complex. It is historically informed and rich with semantic nuance. The grammar of legal language is different from that of regular language and is marked by its use of pedantic phrasing and culturally informed stylistic norms. The need for tools to automate the analysis and processing of legal language is paramount given that the complexity and volume of relevant documentation required to do appropriate diligence is ever increasing.

NATURAL LANGUAGE PROCESSING

Today Natural Language Processing (NLP), an interdisciplinary subfield of AI, plays a central role in legal technology. NLP algorithms have advanced to the point where they can learn to “understand” both the content and context of a document in a meaningful way. Broadly speaking, these algorithms can be used in two ways. First, for classification, by assigning text to one or more categories. Second, for generation, by synthesizing novel text. Legal applications of NLP such as e-discovery, legal research, contract review, and due diligence can be reduced to a set of fundamental tasks. These tasks, with examples, are as follows:

1. TEXT CLASSIFICATION

Identification of fraud is a pervasive problem. Investigators with access to historic corporate records may be interested in isolating language that signifies potential fraud. A machine learning algorithm trained with many examples of fraudulent language can learn to deduce whether a phrase in a document signifies potential fraud or not. Once trained, the algorithm can analyze large volumes of text to identify fraudulent language.

2. ENTITY CLASSIFICATION

Analyzing the language of a document requires the ability to identify words (or "entities") that are semantically similar. For instance, we could teach a machine to identify whether a word is the name of a person ("John") or an organization ("ATCO"). We can use the machine to read a document (such as a contract or judicial decision) and extract names of people and organizations. Extracting these named entities automatically from a document allows legal professionals to streamline the process of legal research.

3. ENTITY RELATION CLASSIFICATION

If we extract entities from a document that represent people and organizations, we can use that information to train a new machine learning model to predict the type of relationship between pairs of entities ("works for", "owns shares of", or "is obligated to"). This model could then be employed to locate all instances in a document where action statements such as "John is employed by ATCO" occur. When analyzing case law, this application can be used to automate extraction of the factual matter of a case without the need to read it directly.

4. TEXT GENERATION

To train a model to generate text we give it the task of predicting the next word in a document given previous words. Training a generative model on a large corpus of text (such as the internet) will allow the model to produce highly coherent language. We can sample from this model to generate text that is both novel and very convincing. For example, we can train a generative model on a large number of real estate contracts. Once trained, the model will be able to synthesize a new contract with statistically similar properties to the contracts it has read during training.

The legal profession, which relies heavily on the use of text, has the potential to be transformed by AI systems that learn from data. The field of NLP offers legal professionals a set of applications which allow them to improve efficiency and reduce costs. These applications allow practitioners the opportunity to automate analysis and processing of documents containing complex domain specific language. Due to its accessibility and affordability, AI is now becoming increasingly essential to stay competitive in a fast-evolving legal sector.

RECIPE

(Easy)

Pasta with Creamy Pumpkin Sauce and Toasted Hazelnuts

This rich, earthy dish featuring canned pumpkin puree was inspired by stovetop mac and cheese. The hazelnut and chive garnishes lend an elegant touch to this hearty pasta.

INGREDIENTS

1/2 c. hazelnuts
1 pound orecchiette pasta
4 tbs. unsalted butter
1 medium red onion, finely diced
2 garlic cloves, minced
2 tsp. minced fresh sage
1 can pumpkin puree
Kosher salt
Freshly ground black pepper
1/2 c. mascarpone cheese
1/4 c. freshly grated Parmigiano-Reggiano cheese, plus more for serving
1/4 c. snipped chives

DIRECTIONS

1. Preheat oven to 375°F. Spread hazelnuts in a pie plate and toast for 7 minutes, until golden. Let cool. Rub off most of the skins and roughly chop.
2. In a large pot of boiling salted water, cook the pasta until al dente. Drain the pasta, reserving 1 cup of the cooking water.

Recipe from foodandwine.com

3. Meanwhile, in a medium saucepan, melt the butter. Add the onion, garlic, and sage and cook over moderately low heat until the onion is softened, about 7 minutes. Transfer the mixture to a food processor. Add the pumpkin puree and process until smooth. Season with salt and pepper.
4. Wipe out the pasta pot. Scrape the pumpkin puree into the pot and cook over moderately low heat until hot. Mix in the mascarpone and the 1/4 cup of grated cheese. Add the pasta and the reserved cooking water and toss to coat thoroughly and heat through. Season with salt and pepper. Transfer the pasta to bowls, sprinkle the hazelnuts and chives on top, and serve right away, passing additional Parmigiano at the table.

Preparing the Next Generation of Lawyers: Associate Business Development

PRISCILLA J. MARTINDALE, Business Development/Marketing Manager, Richards Buell Sutton LLP

Over the course of my legal career, I've learned effective ways to help associates accelerate their business development success, better positioning them for a career of quality legal work they enjoy and that plays to their strengths. Here are a few ideas for your tool kit.

and they're more apt to follow your guidance. It's far easier to mentor someone when they like you.

DON'T OVERLOOK BASICS

Associates join firms with energy and enthusiasm for practicing law. However, the first years can be stressful given the many expectations placed on them; learning about the organization, building relationships with partners and colleagues, and meeting billable targets are only a few.

Every new-hire at our firm goes through a marketing orientation. For associates, practical content and soft skills are reviewed. Practical training includes developing client service skills, the elements of a strong bio, differences between marketing and business development, what a CRM is and how to use it effectively, developing disciplines around maintaining and using contact lists, making the most out of sponsorships etc.

Softer training includes phone/email/out of office etiquette, time management tips, reminders to stay visible and to ask senior lawyers for more work in areas they enjoy, and to communicate if something goes wrong on a file or if they don't understand directions.

Starting early with basic skills training sets the stage for the more sophisticated BD to come.

PROMOTE A CULTURE OF BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT

Normalize business development and make it everyone's business. Firm-wide communication supported by management like sharing newsletters written by lawyers, encouraging staff to promote social media posts which spotlight lawyers' marketing activities, and sending "BD Tips" on a regular basis are informal ways to emphasise business activity. It also broadens business conversations in the lunch room.

Teaching Legal Assistants how to support their lawyers' marketing efforts in their orientations engages them, strengthens the lawyer/assistant relationship, and helps to keep accountability. I give marketing and BD presentations to our Law Students, encourage attendance at networking events, and to co-author articles with lawyers which we promote in order to build their online presence and digital footprint early on.

A standing "share and tell" agenda item in monthly practice group meetings where lawyers report on

GAIN THEIR TRUST

A fulfilling aspect of my role is mentoring junior lawyers. Openness, a willingness to build relationships, flexibility, and discipline through action are imperative to building trust with clients. They also apply when building associate rapport.

Each personality is unique, and I aim to be creative in how I engage with them on marketing and their business development (BD). I've talked shop while playing tennis with a mix of associates and partners, at social gatherings in my home, over dinner instead of lunch, while walking the seawall, and at our firm's Friday Happy Hour. Gain their trust and friendship, their BD activity (industry events attended, prospects they've met for lunch, etc.) drives associates to action between meetings; no associate comes unprepared to share in a room full of partners!

We are all firm ambassadors, and implementing practices like these play a key role in promoting a BD culture.

PROVIDE BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT TRAINING AND SET EXPECTATIONS

Most associates have no idea what marketing and BD is, let alone know what's expected of them. Most law schools don't prepare them for what's to come. I've been a guest lecturer at UBC's Allard School of Law for the past few years on the topic of "the business of law". This is a good start for these students, and hopefully other institutions follow suit.

Crucial training includes: Workshops and coaching on techniques to nurture client relationships that foster client loyalty. Recognizing and understanding the business issues of clients to better serve them and to become trusted advisors who help navigate complex legal issues. Building a strong personal brand and professional reputation. Developing niche practice areas within their primary areas to differentiate themselves. Effective networking tips that lead to referrals. And, leveraging technology, social media and other forms of digital marketing for business growth. If BD is not your strength, there are consultants who conduct this training. In my earlier years, I hired senior legal marketing consultants to support this aspect of my role. Asking rainmakers and/or partners in the firm to share their knowledge and wisdom to associates through lunch and learns is also beneficial.

Regularly engaging in conversations on activities that are crucial to building their specific practices provides the intel needed to best support them. And, tying their efforts into performance reviews, career development, and accountability – is essential.

ASSOCIATE BUSINESS PLANS

Requiring that all associates have a personal business plan provides a framework to help set their short and long-term objectives and connects them to the strategic goals and interests of the firm.

We guide lawyers through the process of creating achievable BD plans with action items for their legal, professional, practice management, business development, and health and wellness goals. Including an addendum to the business plan templates outlining marketing activities connected to a lawyers' year of call, with specific non-billable target BD hours, makes it easier for them to be specific about their marketing efforts. Click here for 10 BD Plan Templates with examples and samples to get you started.

BE THEIR CHAMPIONS

Business development professionals are often an associates' confidante given the mentorship relationship they've built. Associates have entrusted in us their career aspirations, and often we know before others do when they have a win. Many guard their accomplishments. We are their advocates and sharing these wins internally is a tangible way of doing so.

Draw attention to their achievements and give them a shout-out in practice group meetings. Identify leadership opportunities for associates geared to leadership positions which leave them feeling the firm is more fully invested in them for their strengths and skills, resulting in a deeper sense of satisfaction. And let the Managing Partner, Practice Group Leader, and/or their formal mentors know when they've put in the extra effort.

Lawyers spend so many non-billable hours on their business development. Championing associates encourages repeat performances, inspires their colleagues to commit to their BD efforts feeding the business development culture within the firm, and most importantly, makes them feel validated and appreciated.

IN CLOSING:

Associates are the future leaders and business owners of our firms. It is important to foster strong business development skills early on for junior lawyers. It is a key component for a successful legal career, and ultimately helps expand business growth and profitability benefitting all departments.
